Miss Janet Key Married To Mr. George E. Freeman, Jr., At The First Baptist Church

Mrs. George E. Freeman, Jr.

The sanctuary of the First Baptist Church was the scene of the beautiful wedding of Miss Janet Key, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clifton Key of Murray, and Mr. George E. Freeman, Jr., son of Mr. George E. Freeman of Nashville, Tenn.

The Rev. Walter Lee Underwood of McKenzie, Tenn., cousin of the bridegroom, performed the impressive double ring ceremony on Sunday, June 28, at four o'clock in the afternoon.

For the wedding the altar of the church was centered with a large Gothic arch covered with green huckleberry with beautiful large arrangements of white gladioli and majestic daisies and wrought iron candelabra holding gleaming white tapers against a background of huckleberry, palms and large candelabra. The twenty four guests were marked with white satin bows.

A lovely program of nuptial music was presented by Miss Shirley Joyce Chiles, organist, and Mrs. H. Glenn Doran, soloist. The organist's selections were "Liberation," "Ah Sweet Mystery of Life," "Always," "Indian Love Call" and "Love Tree." Miss Chiles softly played "Cher de Luce" during the pledging of the vows. Selections by Mrs. Doran were "I Love You Truly" and "Because We Sing 'Oh Perfect Love' for the benediction. The traditional wedding marches were used for the processional and the recessional.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, looked lovely in her ballerina length gown of white satin and nylon tulle with an overskirt of chantilly lace coming together at the waist and full length skirt in the back. The bodice was of chantilly lace over satin with tulle yoke and pearly "attached to the dress at the neck. The sleeves came to a point at the wrist with satin covered buttons on the pointed sleeves and down the back of the bodice. Her waist length veil of illusion was attached to her satin edged cap of chantilly lace.

She carried a small cascade bouquet of eleocharis caerulea with showery of white streamers centered with a white orchid lying on a white Bible.

Mrs. Donald Crawford of Lyon Grove was maid of honor for her sister. The bridesmaids were Mrs. Gerald Pierce of Paris, Tenn., and Mrs. Vernon Atkins of Clarksville, Tenn.

Each of the attendants wore dresses of green taffeta with an overskirt of nylon net. The bridesmaids in their hair wore of lime colored net with a small cream colored glamoletta on one side. They carried crescent bouquets of green colored glamoletta, caught with shades of Nile green satin ribbon.

The flower girls were Little Miss Vickie Crawford, nine, the bride, and Little Miss Nettie Solomon. Their dresses were of green organza trimmed in white lace. They carried wheel colored baskets caught in front with green bows filled with daisy and asto pedals.

Serving as best man for Mr. Freeman was his father. The ushers were Mr. Jimmy Freeman of Hazel, brother of the bridegroom, Mr. Max Brandon of Hazel, Mr. John Spence and Mr. Joe Davidson of Memphis, Tenn.

Mrs. Key chose for her daughter's

Henry Chambers of Paducah. After the reception the couple left for a southern wedding trip to New Orleans, La., with the bride wearing a light blue suit, pink blouse and gloves and a blue velvet trimmed in pink straw. Her corsage was the white orchid from her bridal bouquet.

Mr. and Mrs. Freeman will reside in Memphis, Tenn., where he is a student at the University of Tennessee Medical College. The bride, after her graduation from Murray State College in January, has been teaching school in Equality, Ill.

Rehearsal Dinner
The bridegroom's mother was hostess and the rehearsal dinner at her home in Hazel on Saturday evening.

Centering the dining table was a beautiful arrangement of white gladioli and majestic daisies. The mantle was adorned with a bouquet of white gladioli while the console table held a Victorian arrangement of pink gladioli.

The bride couple presented gifts to each of their attendants.

Guests included members of the bridal party.

Inspectors Are Assigned To Assist Veterinarians

FRANKFORT, Ky. — Two full-time inspectors, employed by the U. S. Bureau of Animal Husbandry, have been assigned to work in Kentucky in co-operation with the state Division of Livestock Sanitation according to an announcement today by State Veterinarian Dr. L. L. Breck.

The men will assist state personnel in making inspections of raw garbage cooking plants to insure that garbage is cooked properly before being fed to hogs for commercial use. They will also assist in orderly movement of hogs within Kentucky and across state boundaries.

This additional personnel, Breck explained, will assist the state in remaining free of the infectious swine disease, vesicular exanthema, which has reached national emergency proportions. Kentucky is one of eight states free of the disease.

Under a regulation recently passed by the Kentucky Board of Agriculture, no person shall feed garbage without first securing a permit from the Division of Livestock Sanitation. Before receiving a permit, hog raisers must certify that garbage has been heated thoroughly to at least 212 degrees for at least 30 minutes.

Disease Of Heart, Blood Vessels, Cancer Are Greatest Killers

NEW YORK, N. Y. - Nearly three quarters of the $335,000,000 paid to beneficiaries of deceased policyholders by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company last year was for deaths from diseases of the heart and blood vessels, or from cancer.

About 68 percent of the payments - $184,000,000 - was for deaths from diseases of the heart and blood vessels. Twenty-five years ago the proportion paid out for these diseases was only 31 percent.

Cancer death claim payments totaled nearly $62,000,000, or over 18 percent of the total, as compared with 10 percent 25 years ago.

The increase in the proportion of payments for the chronic degenerative diseases, the company's statisticians explain, reflects not only the reduction in mortality from the acute conditions - particularly pneumonia, influenza, and tuberculosis - but also the growing percentage of policy holders at the older ages.

The external causes of death accounted for approximately one ninth of the claim payments during the year. Slight increases in payments on account of accidental deaths and homicide were counterbalanced by declines for suicide and for deaths from enemy action.

In 1928 the payments for deaths from enemy action in Korea amounted to $258,000, somewhat more than half the amount of the corresponding 1951 payments.

The total amount paid out in death claims during the year was the highest in the company's history, exceeding by $23,000,000 the 1951 figure, and well over three times the total 25 years earlier.

The rise in the result, the statisticians observe, of growth in the number of persons insured by the company and an increase in the amount of the average policy.

About $450,000 was paid out on some 6,000 death claims of persons insured under policies which had been in force less than one year. In 1908 of these cases the policy had been in force less than three months.

GHOSTLY HOOFBEATS

By Norman A. Fox

Copyright, 1952, by Norman A. Fox. Distributed by King Feature Syndicate

CHAPTER EIGHTEEN

IN MANNING'S sense of defeat took hold. Torgin's continued willingness to have Slah 7 searched indicated that the house held no secret. Yet Purdy had vanished from that couple's dugout, and the sign said that Purdy had been carried away by a horseman. By some honest rancher who'd since lodged Purdy in the Mannington jail?

What a laughing stock! Flint Man's son would be if he continued pushing a search for a man who was already behind bars!

Maybe Laura was already on her way to Mannington for help. This thought rankled in him. Flint Manning hadn't seemed to care to back him; even on the Marian, shed of a badge, ne'd chosen to go after Texas Joe Bridger alone.

"Where does that door lead?" Manning asked, indicating one in the parlor wall.

"A closet," Torgin moved to the fireplace woodpile and dug from it a whisky bottle. He turned and said in his deep voice, "Sit down and have a drink. You're like a dog chasing his tail, kid. You'd never catch up to it. Sit down, I say. Care to hear the graphophone?"

I've got a bunch of those Uncle Joe records. Funniest things you ever heard. You might as well make the rest of your stay a friendly call. But the voice wasn't friendly.

Manning shook his head.

"There's still Gal."

"He took off this morning on a passer of his own. Matter of fact, he's been hunting you. Day after day anyone named Manning. He finally told me so. He held up the whisky bottle and sipped its contents. "Have about a drink."

"Have one yourself," Manning said.

In the next ten minutes he put his nose into every corner of the room, seeing the filthy kitchen and the cubbyhole where Torgin slept and another bedroom that probably hadn't been used for months. Manning could have traced his name in the dust of the window sill.

Returning, Manning asked, "Got a cellar in this place?"

Torgin shook his head. "The root cellar was dug before the house went up. It made cellar enough."

"How do I get upstairs?"

Torgin's face tightened, and his eyes shone pale. "The upstairs was closed off four winters back. No sense in heating it, and no need to open it since. Man, haven't you caught on yet that nobody's had here?"

"Just the same, I'll have a look," Torgin growled. "Now that's a foot notion."

The supper bell sounded, clear and mellow and low from the room. Torgin stood up from the chair, still holding the bottle. "You might as well eat, long as you're here. Let's go and put our feet under the table."

There it was again, the friendly offer without the friendly voice and now, Manning understood. Plain as hoofprints in the dust, Torgin had been willing enough to let him look everywhere, not talking until upstairs had been mentioned. Torgin had been sluffing and hadn't been too bright about it at that, showing ease the longer they kept away from the house, even reminding Manning of the dog collar, and getting edgy at the last. And all this while, Torgin had been buying time. Time for Gal to come riding back to Slah 7. Time for Gal to get here and face up to a Manning.

No wonder Torgin had jumped so fast when that last rider had ridden up; only the rider had turned out to be someone named Charley. And there were other signs that pointed to the truth. Torgin had chosen a straight-backed chair in preference to the rockers here in the parlor and walked the width of the room to get back to that particular chair. The chair by the door.

Manning darted quickly to that door and wrenched it open and saw a stairs before him.

Torgin exploded then, and Manning had a quick remembrance of a thing how one poke with a stick could start a grizzly rampaging. Torgin came off the chair, swinging the whisky bottle at Manning's head. Manning pulled his head aside and lunged at Torgin. He could almost see the shout that was riding in Torgin's throat, and he wondered if it would carry to the cook-kitchen where the crew was now assembling. He couldn't risk that.

He struck out with his left fist and caught Torgin in the midriff. Fat there, all right—too much fat. Torgin's breath went out of him, he stumbled and went down on one knee, but he let go of the whisky bottle and wrapped his arm around Manning's legs and brought Manning down, too. Manning writhed free and got to a stand and started for the stairs.

Only dimly did he hear the front door bang open. That far corner was in shadow with the horn of the graphophone glimmering faintly, but he got a hazy glimpse of two figures. "Hold it!" someone cried, and he knew that voice to be Gal's. But it was Laura Brownlee who was screaming, "Cole! Watch out!"

Now Manning saw Gal move into the room, into the light, a gun in his right hand, the fingers of his left closed around Laura's wrist. Gal's eyes found Manning and impaled him. Torgin, on the floor, let out a throaty roar that held triumph. Manning thought of his gun and fought down a heavy impulse to try for it. There was just enough coyness left in him to know that Laura would be standing in the way of the shooting.

The two men stood glaring at each other when Gal stooped sideways into the room, pulling Laura along; he flung her into one of the rawhide-bottomed rockers, not being mean about it, saying absently, "Behave yourself, girl," as though he really didn't know she was on earth. He still had his eyes fixed on Manning; his eyes down a cold

Americans Are Marrying Early In Life

NEW YORK, N. Y. — Americans are marrying earlier in life and as a result the proportion of the married among young people is the highest on record, statisticians report.

According to the most recent data available, nearly 17 percent of all girls at ages 15 to 19 are married now or have been married, as compared with only 12 percent in 1940. At ages 20 to 24 the current ever-married proportion is 69 percent, as compared with 53 percent in 1940.

For males the trend to early marriages is equally marked. Currently almost half of the men at ages 20 to 24 are or have been married, as compared with only 28 percent in 1940.

Even in the older age groups, the statisticians point out, the married constitute a notably larger proportion of the population than was the case prior to World War II. This is associated with a marked increase in the marriage rate during and immediately after the war.

The war-time and post-war marriage boom also occurred in several of the nations of the British Commonwealth — England and Wales, Scotland, Australia, and New Zealand. Similarly, an appreciable increase in the proportion married at the younger ages occurred in Ireland, Sweden, and Norway, were relatively late marriage long has been common.

In France and Germany, where large numbers of young men were out of the country during the war, the experience ran counter to the general trend, and the proportion of married young women was lower after the war than before. In Germany the shortage of marriageable men was accentuated by heavy casualties.

"The prospects of early marriage are brighter in the United States than in any of the other Western countries for which data are available," observe the statisticians. "Among the factors stipulating early marriage in our country are favorable economic conditions, and the relative freedom with which boys and girls mix socially."

Store Bought Teeth Come In Handy To Stop Indians

By HARMAN NICHOLS
United Press Staff Correspondent
RENO, Nev. (UP) — This story has been passed along decade after decade, and still is told about the guy who won a battle against the Indians here by flashing a set of store-bought teeth.

The character was one Harmanus Van Vleck, according to the folks hereabout. Legend says he routed a whole tribe without firing a shot, about a century ago. It seems he and his new wife were on a caravan headed west. The other, more seasoned travelers joshed a warning. At length he discounted Harm because he feared the Indians would swoop down and ride off with his bride. Anyhow, one night at a spot which now is Reno, the oxen were unyoked and the wagons were drawn up in a circle for protection. Harm took to trotting. Finally, he saddled his mare and went into the brush to scout the Indian fires, which could be seen from where he and the others had bedded for the night.

Harm circled downwind to avoid the Indian dogs which might yelp —capped and primed his hand-guns, and then took a peek over the hill.

What he saw made Harm's heart jump. There were many more Indians than he had figured on. Worse, they were war-painted and jumping and ready.

Young Harm snuck back to his tethered mare. There was not enough time, he figured, for a gallop back to warn the wagon train. This was something he must handle himself.

Harm led his horse back close to the Indian campfires. Then he leaped into the saddle and worked his way down through the mass of dancing, scalp-hungry savages.

Harm, in a flash, became a dozen men all by himself. He whooped. He hollered. He yodeled and acted like a whole army attacking. The Indians froze in their deerstiffs. This hardy pioneer, who had started on what he thought would be a mission of suicide to save his bride, suddenly came up with another notion.

Out came his false teeth. He held them before him and his charging mare. In the full light of the camp fire, he made the molars act up. They gnashed like and they licked and, according to the story still going around, they even grained.

It must have been an awful sight to those Indians. At any rate, the Redmen were routed, fleeing into the dark of night.
